ORIENTATION

Well, as being freshers to a new place everything seemed very new. New place, new people and new teachers! The freshers were being led to the two day orientation programmes. Being new to the place, I had no company and was clueless about how the program was going to be. Well, it started off with prayers and speeches. The students were told about cleanliness. Dr.Mubeen of the Department of Zoology gave useful tips through a Power point presentation about personal cleanliness and hygiene. The second half of the day was taken over by Mr. Arun, who told the girls what communication actually is. He entertained the girls by calling them on stage and gave them tasks. He explained "failures are stepping stones to success" and failing is not something embarrassing but a very good lesson to go ahead in life. They also gave the rules, regulations and the principles to be followed. On the second day, the Head of the Department of Psychology spoke about the physically challenged people. It was emotional, motivating and a very touching speech. They also told the rules, regulations and the principles to be followed in the college.

DO WOMEN LACK AMBITION?

I often ask a question to everyone. ‘Do women lack ambition?’. My answer is exactly not. Women aim high but they do not get opportunities to achieve their aim. They may get married or they may not achieve their aim because of their family’s economic situations. We say men and women are equal but still in the minds of parents they see women as a weaker sex. We all know that if a man is educated, it would educate only him. But if a woman is educated , it will educate the whole family. Hence a woman’s education is very important. As I am in a women’s college I used to ask my college mates, “what their aim is?” they often reply that they don’t have any aim! The reason for this is that they may get married. This makes me feel that they are under pressure. My answer is that they don’t get an opportunity to aim high. We all think that women achieve in all fields on par with men. But I am not sure whether every woman reach their goal. Not exactly, many women don't have any aim and also there is lack of opportunities. This is the reason why women stay back. And another reason is the fear of sexual harrasement. This may demoralize their ambition. Women don't lack in their ambition but the situations and lack of opportunities may affect their ambition. I wish even after years, women don't lack ambitions because of any other reasons. They should come out of their shackles.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTRY WITH PEOPLE WHO DEVASTATE THE SOCIETY WELL

A girl is still being judged by her looks.

If her outfit is way too less formal than expected, she is considered to be a promiscuous. If she has boyfriends yet, it is another way to humiliate her by saying she is characterless...

If a girl is fond of short skirts she's advised that society would talk bad about her. But, if a guy wears something which reveals his briefs off then he is known as the so called 'fashionista'.

They said that, Nirbhaya was molested because she didn't guard her modesty' shameless! So seven year old Hasini was brutally raped because she was way too sexy and shown off to that pervert?

Maybe these people would even say that Hasini was a slut! Those innocent girls were already tormented physically and you people rape their souls through words. Wow! Democratic country with people who devastate the society!

Nobody is expected to be a feminist but not being a chauvinist is the least thing that would be done as good. We don't expect any wishes on woman's day rather show a little of humanity before leaving a word of disgrace.

Stop judging a woman's choice without understanding her reasons!

“EXAM HALL”

The smile in your eyes;
The spark on your lips;
Tells me your untold story;

Oh cute little fairy;
Charming, gorgeous, beauty;
Why isn't watching you every day my duty;
Far sits unnoticed the other doll;
Vigorously writing in the entire hall;
Yes, your right exam hall and the poetic me;
Examiner watching the pretty me;
Its 10 minutes for '11' and where the serious me;
Hiding the poem, horrible tragedy with me;
Bright beautiful sunlight filling up my black answer sheets;
Infinite thoughts and the question paper facing me.

UNTITLED

Writing a poem,
Is best when solemn,
Far away from the noises,
Close to nature's voices,
There always exists,
A bond you can't resist.
Nature provides her lap,

So that you can take a nap,
Also write a poem that's snap.
Writing, gives an eclectic feel,
That helps you reveal,
Your inner happiness.

FRIENDS

This ain't a story 'bout me,
Neither a story 'bout you,
It ain't a story 'bout a he or she,
It's about Friendship that's true.
My friends stole my lunch,
They stole my heart too,
Life is full of crisp and crunch,
But plain boring without you!
They insult on a daily basis,
They make fun of me,
But guess who helps in a crisis,

Laughter therapy without a fee.
Many people call us this,
Many people call us that,
But my friends are my bliss,
My backbenchers deserve a pat!

DO NOT YIELD TO CRITICISM

Once upon a time there lived a great artist in the South of India. He was a great artist who very well portrayed the life of people at that time. He received many gifts from many kings across the world for his work. Although he had received many gifts he didn't have the satisfaction for his work. So he wanted to know people's opinion about his work. Then he thought of a plan, he drew a beautiful picture and placed it in the heart of the town. Then he kept a board under the painting with the words "please mark the defects with an X mark". That night he couldn't sleep well because he thought of the comments that would come up. The next day he was shocked to see the painting full of "X marks". He was disheartened. At that time he met his teacher and told him about the previous day's happenings. His teacher laughed and asked him to do the painting again and keep it in the same place. But this time with different words, "please correct the above painting with the given paint and brush if you find some defects”. The artist did the same. The next day he was surprised to find the painting without correction. He immediately ran to his teacher’s house and told him everything. In return his teacher smiled and said “The world is busy in finding out other’s mistakes but it will not have time to rectify one’s mistakes”

“So you have to remain master of your art by taking only good comments from the world”
